

About the Contributors

Leo Gregory A. Fordan graduated with a bachelor's degree in Language & Literature from the University of the Philippines Baguio and is now pursuing his Master's in Linguistics at the University of the Philippines Diliman. He is currently working as a researcher at the Komisyon sa Wikang Filipino.

Ethan Nicholas C. Salvador is a current MA student of Linguistics at the University of the Philippines, Diliman. He has a keen interest in phonetics and phonology, and specializes primarily in language prosody. He recently won the Outstanding Graduate Paper Award at the Linguistics Society of the Philippines International Conference 2026 for his research on the stress systems of Central Bisayan languages. Aside from this, Nico is also passionate about morphosyntax and second language acquisition, especially for foreign languages, such as French.

Si Jem R. Javier ay Kawaksing Propesor sa Departamento ng Linggwistiks, Unibersidad ng Pilipinas Diliman. Mayroon siyang PhD sa Linggwistiks (Linggwistiks ng Pilipinas) at nagsasagawa ng pananaliksik na pangunahing nakatuon sa linggwistiks ng Pilipinas at aralin sa kultura, gayundin sa pagkakaugnay ng wika at katalusan.

Mark Kevin “MK” P. Reginio is a licensed teacher and an anthropologist. His research interests include the Filipino Deaf community and Filipino Sign Language, linguistic anthropology, and language and education. He is currently finishing his training to be a sign language interpreter.